A DREAM OF BATTLE-

BY GEORGE W. BUNGAY.

Then through the storm of fire and lead, Where the warm rain was falling red. As the fragrant flowing wine,
As the fragrant flowing wine,
Moved the brave troops of gallant men,
Over the hills and through the glen,
Down to the classic Rhine.

Amid the smoke so hot and dun, With man to man and gun to gun, Free as water the blood did run The blood was thicker than wine, Cannons thundered thro' the summer air,-Bullets like bees buzzed everywhere,

On prancing war steeds, strong and fleet Through fire and smoke and leaden sleet. Like foaming seas the squadrons meet On the nation's boundary line.

On the green banks of the Rhine.

The brave battallions halt and wheel,-Before them gleams a hedge of steel,-Behind them red-mouthed mortars peal ;-The boundry is a dead line.

Rifles ring out upon the air, Where rolls the rhythmic Rhine.

Where flows the river Ilhiau. The hero, horse, and shattered shell Show where the fated missile fell, Shricking into the crowded dell.

They live, -for heroes never die,
Who fight for freedom on the Rhine.
